Methodology:

This 'Enter and View' visit was announced to the care home 21 days in advance. We contacted them initially via e-mail discussing the purpose of our visit including the details of our visit, the time and date. We then followed this up with additional e-mails and a telephone call several days before the visit as we had not had any acknowledgement. We managed to speak to the care home and confirm that they were aware of our upcoming visit on Friday 22nd September 2023.

Details of Visit:

Observations:

Introductions and Entrance:

We were welcomed by senior carer Maxine, who introduced herself to us when we entered the care home. We were not given a guided tour by the staff, but we were pointed in the general direction of the different rooms and informed that there were no restrictions on where we could go. All the staff we spoke to was friendly and welcoming.

The entrance to the care home was very secure, with a call bell that alerts staff of any visitors wishing to enter. When ringing the bell, it took less than a minute for us to be let in. There was a small covered shelter above the entrance door, should visitors encounter bad weather whilst waiting to enter the care home. We were then instructed to sign in using the visitor book which was displayed on a table in reception.

The reception area was small but very clean and tidy. There was a hand gel dispenser and seasonal Halloween raffle prizes on display. You could also request additional PPE if this was required. One thing we did note was that there is no seating available in the reception area due to it being too small.

Gardens and External Areas:

There are two outdoor areas for residents to sit. Both areas are well-kept with decorations hanging from the trees and various garden ornaments, a bird bath and a wooden bar area for outdoor events. There are tables, chairs and benches for residents to sit in the garden should they wish, with the garden being accessible through the main lounge area. For residents upstairs, they are supervised downstairs in the lift by a member of staff in order to access any communal or outdoor areas.

Meal times:

Residents have a choice of meals each day, with the options being displayed on the mealtime boards using both images and words. There is an on-site chef that prepares and cooks the meals each day, with residents being encouraged to eat in the dining room but can eat in their rooms if required (preference, illness etc.) The dining room itself was calm and peaceful, with the radio playing and a nice view onto the garden.

Food is served on plates and given to staff members, who then deliver it to the residents at the table. Residents are offered both hot and cold drinks, and can request more food if they wish. As observed, residents did not have to wait long for food, but residents reported that it was often just warm and not hot.

The downstairs dining room was clean and accessible. The seating was appropriate to everyone's needs and there was adapted seating and equipment for those who needed it. The upstairs dining room did not appear as well looked after upon observation and there were food and drink stains on the walls and skirting boards.

In the upstairs dining room, we observed a basket of sensory toys to support with security and any un-ease (teddies, dolls etc.)

Residents Rooms:

We observed the resident's rooms to be clean and bright. It was clear that residents were able to bring their own belongings such as personal photos and ornaments. Residents had any equipment that they required such as Zimmer frames, raised beds and buzzers to alert staff members. Residents have en-suite rooms which are small but clean. There is a toilet and sink in each en-suite, with the communal bathrooms having access to a bath/shower.

Outside the resident's rooms, there are picture boxes of each resident. There is also an imitation letter box and door knocker on the outside of the downstairs rooms to give residents a feeling of living in their own home.

Communal Areas:

Layout:

There was a different layout of the upstairs and downstairs levels of the care home due to a downstairs extension. The corridors were wide, bright and fresh in the downstairs areas, with several seating areas for residents and visitors and water jugs and cups supplied. The upstairs level did not feel as bright and airy, and lacked the space that downstairs provides. There are railings down both sides of the corridors. The corridors on both floors are clear and easy to walk around. There are signs with directions to different rooms, with the addition of dementia friendly signs which were bright with enlarged images.

Downstairs, the corridors give access to bedrooms, communal areas such as the lounge and dining room, toilets, bathrooms and the kitchen. There is a lift between the lower and upper floor.

Certain doors within the care home are locked. There is a code at the top of the stairs to get through the door into the upper corridor.

In the communal bathrooms, toilet aids are bright red to help people with dementia determine positions/space.

Lounge:

There is generally a calm environment within the care home. In the lounge there was a TV playing for residents who wished to watch it. The smaller communal areas either had radios playing or nothing at all. In addition to a TV, residents could also access IPAD's and books. The communal areas were clean and tidy, with artificial plants and flowers to make the environment seem brighter.

Throughout all the communal areas there was specialist equipment for those who needed it, such as hoists, special chairs, chair alarms and pressure relief cushions.

Activities:

There is an activity co-ordinator who works Monday-Friday. The activities are displayed on a notice board in the main corridor and activities are adapted depending on popularity.

The activity co-ordinator provides activities downstairs in the mornings and then goes upstairs to the EMI floor in the afternoon. Residents are encouraged to join in but there is no pressure to take part. There are themed activities depending on the time of year, such as a Halloween raffle, pantomime and festive music events. Family members are invited to attend activities but the uptake of this is low.

Recent trips for residents have included a visit to the local pub, Wentworth and Meadowhall Shopping Centre.

Church services can be accessed online by residents as currently there is no visiting clergy.

Staff:

All staff we encountered were friendly, polite and welcoming. We observed staff engaging well with residents and having pleasant and positive conversations.

The staff we observed was following infection control procedures and was bare below elbow, with some staff visibly carrying hand gel.

We also spoke with staff about any external staff members that visit the care home. There is a hairdresser every Friday who is well used by many of the residents as observed. There is an optician that visits regularly, as well as a GP who visits weekly, and a nurse who visits daily. An escort is also provided for hospital visits.

The staff area is very small with just a table and small seating area. There are also staff lockers available and a shower, sink and toilet for staff. The manager's office was very small for the 2 members of staff working in there, with lots of paperwork cluttering the desks and the space.

Survey Responses:

As well as conducting our own observations, we completed some surveys whilst we visited the care home with both residents and staff. We did this to get true and honest feedback from people who know the care home best. We will use this data combined with our own observations to form a summary and any recommendations.

We were on-hand to assist anyone who needed help completing the survey or understanding the questions. During our visit at the care home, we spoke to 6 residents and assisted them in completing our resident's survey.

Executive Summary and Recommendations:

Overall, the residents are happy and feel safe living at Eastwood House care home, and staff members enjoy working here. The care home is clean, bright and welcoming, with residents bedrooms made to feel homely and personal. Meal times are well received, with a good choice of hot and cold food, snacks and refreshments. One thing that was noted by residents is that food is often warm or sometimes cold, rather than hot. Specialist equipment is provided for those who need it, and there is a good selection of activities and entertainment for residents. Staff members are friendly, welcoming and interact positively with residents. If residents need anything, they are aware that they just need to ask staff and this will be provided for them. This applies to visiting the doctor, attending church, requesting more food or participating in activities.

Through our observations, it was noted that upstairs areas of the care home are looking rundown and tired in terms of decorating and space compared to the downstairs rooms, and would benefit from more regular maintenance to ensure upstairs residents are not at a disadvantage.

Recommendations:

- Ensure hot food is served at the correct temperature
- Ensure regular maintenance and general upkeep of the upstairs facilities for residents to match the standards of downstairs
- Staff to always wear name badges so residents and visitors can identify them
- Any activities to be verbalised to residents in addition to posters on notice boards
- Actively try to involve families and carers more in the life of the home where possible and where requested

Responses

Response from Eastwood House Care Home:

“We are taking the recommendations into account; we found the visit was useful and the following are in place”:

- The food temperatures have been checked and we have had our Food safety inspection 5.10.23 which scored 5 out of 5. I have this also on the agenda for our next kitchen staff meeting to discuss and feedback to staff and residents. As manager I check all temperatures weekly and monitor the mealtimes as part of Quality Assurance.
- The upstairs area is scheduled for redecoration to freshen the areas up.
- We have made a request to head office for the name badges.
- The activities schedule is already being verbalised daily to all our residents; this is how the Activities co-ordinator determines if she is changing the activity on the day. Some days our residents may wish to take part in a different activity rather than the one scheduled.
- Relatives and friends are always encouraged to take part, there are always posters advertising what is happening and when, where in the home on the main corridor notice board. This is easily accessible to all our visitors to the home. We also invite them to resident and relative meetings both by advertising and reminding them verbally if they are in the home at the time
